Song of the Cable. Bury me deep in my ocean bed, For I have a work to do. Below the billows my couch is spread, Far off from mortal view.

Nor cold, nor heat, nor storm, nor wave Shall enter my silent home; With the dead I'll live in the ocean grave, Where strife can never come. Ye nery coursers of the deep,

Though switt your pinions ply, Ere a blast of air through your rigging sweep, Home and again" am I. I ran a race on land with thought, But never an inch did yield; And now on ocean's race course brought,

I'm mistress of the field. Ye noiscless nerves, the wires of mind, My minions are for aye, For in Atlantic's breast enshrined The world's great nerve am I.

Nor sage nor statesman ever knew The half that I shall know; For all that mortals think and do Must through my audience go.

And "thoughts that breathe and words that And pulses oft of joy and woe, Of power and pelt, shall each in turn Through my mysterious arteries flow.

While peace shall last through my domain A' wo k you'll ever find me; Or, ever war and terror reign, I'll go where none can bind me! C. G. P.

COMMUNICATED. I noticed in your paper of yesterday morning, some remarks suggesting how the trade of Alexandria might be increased-such as "extending her manufactures-the building o' vessels -- and extending her Coal trade."

Her manufactures would naturally extend. if proper stimulus was afforded, which can only be obtained by action on the part of the general government-securing to them the bome market.

The extension of her Coal trade will follow a general improvement in the various branches of manufacture, not only here but every where else in our country -- thereby increasing the general consumption of Coal. The facilities are at hand for an extensive ceal business, and colarged facilities will be aforded by Railroads now being built. But in addition to a prospective increase in the shipments of coal from this pert, by completing a link in our great Southern and Western Railway-we may have opened to the enterprise of our merchants an opportunity to make this a shipping port for thousands of bales of cotton, that now find their way by a long line of transportation through Memphis to New Orleans, making the circut thence of our whole Southern gulf coast and Eastern sea board to the cities of Baltimore, New York, and Boston; whereas by a suitable management with the various Rail road Companies, interested—the stream may beturned in this direction, and the port of Alexandria be once more adorned with a fleet of large vessels.

Who will initiate this movement? VIRGINIA.

AUCTION SALES.

PUBLIC SALE OF MOST VALUABLE TAVERN PROPERTY AT LOUISA COURT HOUSE.—Will be sold, on Monday. the 20th day of September, to the highest bidder, the mest valuable and well known TAYERN PROPERTY at Louisa Court House, (it being the only tavers in the village.) together with about TEN ACRES OF LAND. This is believed to be the most valuable tavern property in Eastern Virginia, possessing advant ges which but few other locations do.

The buildings, consisting of three large HOUSES, together with various cottages d others, render it well adapted for the accommodation of the numerous persons stopping there on all public occasions, and peculiarly so for the reception of boarders during summer.

The dining room, bar, and stables are abundantly supplied with spring water, which also affords a constant fountain in the yard, keeping a tank, containing 4400 galions, constantly filled, which vill supply water for baths, gar-dens, washing, &c. The stables, containing 326 stalls, do not afford sufficient accommodation for the public on court days.

There are also a store room and saddler's shop, which rent well, belonging to the tavern. This property, being situated immediately upon the Virginia Central Railroad, 62 miles northwest of Richmond, and 14 miles of Gordonsville-the junction of the Alexandria Rail road with the Central-the mail cars passing it twice a day in each direction, make it accessible from all points. Declining health only induces me to dispose of such valuable property.

Tenus:—One fourth cash; balance in 1, 2, and 3 years, bearing interest, but if desired, upon good security, time will be given upon the whole.
